TURN ON THE LIGHTS.

Every Country Home to Have Gas for Lighting and Cooking.

It wasn't so very many years ago that the citizens of Philadelphia demonstrated against the introduction of gas in their city; they regarded it as both dangerous and impractical.

Now every city of importance has its gas plant or has natural gas. The people in cities soon learned that gas gave them a better light and was cleaner and immensely safer than coal oil lamps. It's difficult nowadays to find a coal oil lamp in any of the city homes.

Country people have long wanted the conveniences enjoyed by their city cousins, but the gas supply has been limited by the extent of pipe lines.

Invention, the daughter of Necessity, has supplied the want. Every country home, church, bank, store and hall can have gas in steel bottles.

The SOUTHWESTERN BLAUGAS COMPANY, one of the eight companies now manufacturing Blaugas in the United States is just completing its big factory in Kansas City, Missouri. The factory has an initial capacity for supplying 18,000 customers, with ample ground room for enlargement.

Blaugas has been in general use in Germany and several other European countries for over six years; in Austria and Bulgaria the government operates all Blaugas factories.

Blaugas is rapidly becoming very popular in the United States. It is bound to reach every place in the country, because it is the safest gas known, being three times safer even than city gas; and it is the most efficient gas known for lighting and cooking producing five times as much light and heat per cubic foot as city gas.

The Blaugas light is remarkably brilliant, and yet is very soft for reading. It is also said to be the most economical illuminant and cooking convenience for the country.

A unique feature of this new service is the fact that the Southwestern Blaugas Company guarantees to keep the equipment sold by them in perfect working order at no expense to the purchaser. The equipment consists of a steel cabinet, forty inches wide, five feet high and sixteen inches deep, in which the gas bottles are connected to the expanding apparatus; the whole equipment is very simple and the gas is expanded and put into the house pipes at an eight ounce pressure, without the slightest attention from the user. The only thing the user does is to make an occasional exchange of bottles.

Except for this cabinet, which is placed at some convenient point against the house, the rest of the system, the piping, fixtures and stove, is arranged just as though the user had a connection with the city pipe line.
